

Bill Holt

What's the most important thing you want your students to walk away with after Super School?

Bill Holt:

Confidence in their physical game, and knowing what to work on when they get back home. I also want them to feel free to e-mail me with their bowling questions.

Dean Hinitz

Jim Merrell:

I want my students to leave Super School with an understanding of what makes their game work, and the knowledge to get it back on track when the wheels seem to be falling off. And I want them to take with them an understanding of why they need to be their own best friend and coach.

John Jowdy

Dean Hinitz:

The most important thing I want my students to have is the confidence that they have championship tools to work with, no matter what circumstances they bowl under. I also want them to see that what they learn about the mental game in bowling applies to everything in life.

John Jowdy:

The most important thing I want my students to walk away with is that they are better bowlers and feel their money was well spent. This is a guarantee I have given my students throughout my coaching career.

Jim King

Jim King:

I hope that each Super School student goes home with some newfound confidence in their own ability and the feeling that Super School was money well spent.
